

LEARNING TO SURVIVE

The hermit crab parents are tired of their son choosing plastic cups and bottles over perfectly good shells.

How many times do I have to tell you? Bottles and cups are NOT shells!

See isn't this way more stylish than your old shells.

I dare you to crawl inside that thing. And this time, don't expect me to come swimming after you!

Mom! Look! Don't I look cool?!!

You look ridiculous. That's a bottle cap! How many times have I told you to stay away from those two?

A young fish proudly shows off his latest accessory.

Plastic is SO COOL right? Then why are these elders always keeping the kids away from it?

I know! Look at us enjoying every bit.

That looks so much fun! Wish we could do that.

Yes! You can do so much with it, ride on it, hide in it and even wear it!

It wasn't long before the fun turned dangerous. . .

... I think this was a bad idea!

For once, Mum was right.

Yeah. I'm sticking to shells from now on.

Yea we went too far. . .

Once, the ocean was simply home, the safest place on earth. Now, growing up in it, survival means knowing the difference between food and plastic, shelter and waste, play and danger.

Copyright © 2026 by Charcoal-the studio. All rights reserved.
All content, illustrations, design and concept used in the calendar are subject to copyright.

Read More Stories

Back

